Intranet

~~If you build it, they will come~~

Gulf of execution: Gap between a user's goal for action and the means to execute that goal

A user need statement is an actionable problem statement summarizing who a particular user is, the user's need, and why the need is important to that user.

User	Need	Goal
An individual contributor	Find the company policy for social media	Comply

Centralizing content across peer site collections

KEY: Hub Site | Communication Site | Team Site | Home Site | → Associated Site (to Hub)

Step 1: Create a robust information architecture

What are content types?

- Can be a document, list item, or folder

- Pulls together an item and information about the item:
  - Metadata (through site columns and content type name)
    - Ability to require metadata
  - Template (for documents only)
  - Information management settings

What is content type publishing?

- Centralized content type management in the Content type gallery in SharePoint admin center
- Ability to add custom content types across some or all site collections
- A site collection at sites/ContentTypeHub

Information architecture better practices

- Name your document library and site columns without spaces
- Use document library titles to provide metadata
- Leave the default content type for “Documents” in libraries with multiple content types
- Build at the site level or in the content type gallery
- Name content types as a singular item (“policy” not “policies”)
- If you have a site column for “Document Type”, those are likely your content types
- Consider content type inheritance
- Map site columns to managed metadata in the Term Store, when possible
- Leave “All Documents” view unfiltered and ungrouped

Step 2: Surface content in context through web parts

Option 1: Highlighted Content Web Part

What is the Highlighted Content web part?

- Out of the box web part
- Successor to Content Query and Content Search web parts
- Display content from multiple sources in one place on a page
- Custom query in KQL, CAML, and/or Managed Properties
